A Message to the JISCE Stakeholders'

Dear Stakeholders' and Friends of JISCE,

The public health crisis in which we all find ourselves will test the mettle of every institution. For JIS College of Engineering, the immediate challenge was to transition quickly to a fully online educational program and to a fully remote work force. We held our last in-person class on Friday, March 6. By Wednesday, March 11, we had moved classes taught by our faculty members online. In just a few more days, the JISCE's Staff made all of our operations - career development, student services, alumni relations, and more - fully remote.

It was a tremendous display of teamwork, and we are enormously proud that we accomplished this transition so rapidly. We are also enormously grateful to the faculty and staff who have worked so hard to make it happen and to the students who have been patient, flexible, and understanding. Throughout the process, the JIS family has responded as it was expected: with resilience, dedication, compassion and kindness.

It has been a radical transformation, but the important work that we and our students do continue. Classes will be online through the end of the semester. Students will continue all of their training remotely, including participating in projects, co-curricular, and extra-curricular experiences. The College campus is closed, though we are trying to offer virtual library services.

Our thoughts are with all the JISCE Stakeholders' and we hope you and your families are healthy and safe.

Warm Regards,

JIS College of Engineering
